

From: Glenn Bowsby
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 12/6/01 11:30pm
Subject: MS

I do believe Microsoft has created a product like no other and keeps improving. Is MS a monopoly? Yes, but it is because of us the customer. Customers do have a choice of what computer they, and what OS they have installed. MS has become a standard to the industry making it difficult for Open Source OS like Linux to really get notice. Also there is not a lot of software or drivers for Linux. I know because it took me 5 days to find them for my hardware. Windows has every driver I need. So for Linux and other open source to become popular they need MORE drivers and MORE software. Neither of these MS should be blamed for but rather the companies who make the product. Such as a software company like Westwood. They make games for Windows because they probably would not make any money making that software for Linux. Is this MS fault NO. A driver for my sound card which is available on Windows but not Linux. Is this MS fault NO. Therefore MS should not be sued the other companies should get more applications and games by big companies like Westwood and Correll, and have a more complete drivers list. From the vendors. MS should not be blamed for the actions of vendors and customers.

---

Get your FREE download of MSN Explorer at <http://explorer.msn.com/intl.asp>